INSIDE LINFIELD MAGAZINE

If you have an aversion to bugs, spend a few hours with Chad Tillberg and his students in Insect Biology and you might be pulled into the complex world of the tiny critters under our feet. That is one example in this issue of last summer's collaborative research funded through the new Center for the Northwest. We also introduce you to one of our philosophy professors known for his energy and animation. We salute an alumna who was named national middle school principal of the year and take a look at an alumnus who tracks down cyber criminals. You'll learn about a student who had an inside look at global politics during the G8 and G20 summits in Canada. And you will get a glimpse of the transformation under way at Northup Hall. Read on for these and the many stories that attest to the power of a small college.
