Taking part in media evolution

It wasn't until after the applause died down, the audience settled back and Oprah Winfrey began reading her opening monologue from the studio teleprompter that it hit Peter Clem '88.

"Oprah is reading the words I wrote," recalls Clem, a former staff producer on the Oprah Winfrey Show. "Twenty million people are watching this right now and I wrote that. It was spectacular."

Now vice president of digital content for Scripps Networks, Clem looks back on his more than two decades-long career with as much excitement as when he first began experimenting with video production in Pioneer Hall.

Clem is responsible for determining which shows featured on Food Network, HGTV, Travel Channel, DIY Network and Cooking Channel are sent to video distributors such as iTunes and Hulu. Clem joined Scripps Networks in 1998 as executive producer for HGTV Productions, where he managed several projects, including annual specials such as White House Christmas, HGTV Dream Home and live coverage of The Tournament of Roses Parade.

As a Linfield student, Clem stumbled into media production under the mentorship of Craig Singletary, professor emeritus of communications, who "provided a terrific foundation on which I could grow." With a key to the radio station and TV studio, Clem was given the freedom to experiment with the equipment on his own time.

"It was freeing creatively to explore production in a playful way," says Clem, who also played basketball and served as a member of the STARS admission program. "I truly didn't think there was value for me professionally. I just really loved it."

But after Singletary took students on a field trip to KATU, the ABC affiliate in Portland, Clem found his calling. He went to work at KATU after graduation.

Clem compares a producer's role to that of an artisan.

"Except I'm modeling images and scripts," he says. "These days, I'm on the front end of some exciting things – iPods, iPads, mobile devices, watching video on the web instead of TV. It's an exciting evolution of the way people are consuming media and I'm happy to be a part of that."

His advice to Linfield students is the same thing he tells his own kids, Davis, 9, and Riley, 13, named for Linfield's Riley Hall where Clem played basketball.

"Find something you're passionate about and believe in," he says. "I learned from numerous Linfield professors to go the next step, be competitive and keep pushing yourself. You'll feel better about who you are."

– Laura Davis

Peter Clem's daughter, Riley, 13, with whom he shares a birthday, is named after Riley Hall, which housed the gym in which he played basketball. "That was such an important piece of me. I have some of the wood flooring."

Planning pays for Stewarts, Linfield

Bruce and Ruth (Barnett) Stewart '49 and '51 have a long affiliation with Linfield. Recently they strengthened that tie, and secured dependable income for themselves, by creating a charitable gift annuity with the college.

Bruce, a Linfield trustee emeritus, retired after a 36-year career in education, and Ruth worked as a receptionist in a doctor's office for a number of years. Their careers allow them to live a comfortable lifestyle. They are frugal and have always lived within their means while raising three children.

With money already invested in CDs, they realized that they could make a gift to Linfield and secure a fixed income for life that would exceed what the CDs were providing. They made a gift and in exchange, signed a contract with Linfield that guarantees a 6.3 percent yearly payout for as long as either of them is living. In addition to the income stream, approximately 75 percent of each payment is non-taxable income.

"It's been a wonderful life," said Bruce, who served as president of the Oregon Education Association and was active in American Baptist Churches of Oregon. "I've really enjoyed being part of the Linfield community. It's a great school with dedicated professors."
