Accreditation visit scheduled in October

Linfield College is in the process of reaffirming its accreditation by the Northwest Commission on Colleges and Universities. A team of accreditors will visit Linfield College on Oct. 22-24, 2008. Included in the visit will be a review of all college programs, including the Linfield College-Portland Campus/Linfield Good Samaritan School of Nursing and the college's adult degree completion programs. The purpose of the visit will be to review Linfield's Self Study Report and to meet with members of the college and community to assess Linfield's compliance with the commission's accreditation standards.

Linfield is accredited at the present time to offer the Bachelor of Arts, Bachelor of Science and Bachelor of Science in Nursing degrees. Its present accreditation was affirmed at the last accreditation review in 1998 and the most recent accreditation action was the affirmation of accreditation at the 2003 interim visit by the Commission.

The Northwest Commission on Colleges and Universities invites comments from members of the public pertinent to Linfield College's reaccreditation review. The Northwest Commission on Colleges and Universities must receive comments by Monday, Sept. 22, 2008, at its headquarters, 8060 165th Ave. NE, Suite 100, Redmond, WA 98052, 425-558-4224. Comments must be in writing and signed in order to be accepted by the Commission. Further information about Linfield College can be found at www.linfield.edu, or about the Northwest Commission on Colleges and Universities at www.nwccu.org.

Mayer's clients are the four-legged kind

Devon (Evans) Mayer '93 is using her psychology degree in ways she never imagined when she graduated from Linfield College.

After college, she worked in resident treatment centers with schizophrenic clients. Then, "I was given a dog and was having some trouble with her. I had a friend who was an animal trainer in movies, so I called her, and in the conversation I joked: 'You don't need an assistant, do you?'"

Mayer was hired for six months to work on the movie Paulie: 10 hours a day, six days a week for $150 a week. Mostly, she cleaned the film's birds. "I learned a lot from the other trainers," she said. "At the end of that movie, I was hooked."

Ten years later, she trains dogs, cats, rodents, birds and monkeys (nothing big – "I don't want to get eaten," she said) with Boone's Animals for Hollywood. She has more than 20 films to her credit, including Firehouse Dog, Must Love Dogs, Catwoman, What Women Want and Stuart Little.

Mayer and her husband, Morgan, an account executive for ClickTime in San Francisco, live in Avon, Colo. Among their three dogs is the Yorkie Mayer worked with on the Seventh Heaven TV show. Mayer has a dog-training business and conducts obedience school when she's not in Los Angeles.

On the movie set, she said, training is similar. "Once you learn the concept of training and relating to the animals, it's being very aware, reading them and finding a way to connect with them," she said. One of the first things she teaches animals is their mark, or position, like a human actor's. Clickers, food and toys help to reinforce behavior.

At Linfield, Mayer's internships included a pet therapy program. She said her college classes instilled in her a work ethic that serves her well in an industry where millions of dollars are on the line.
