Downs finds fulfillment on island of Sumba

Kathryn Kiekel Downs '82 and her husband, Sean, felt blessed with career success, two children and a beautiful home in Laguna Hills, Calif.

But they began to question the significance of their lives. A search for meaning and the perfect wave led Sean, a surfer, to the island of Sumba. And there, the couple found a new purpose: helping some of Indonesia's poorest people. They now run the nonprofit Sumba Foundation, dedicated to improving the islanders' health and education while respecting their traditions.

It has been an interesting journey, says Downs, who majored in business at Linfield and previously worked as an evening gown buyer for Nordstrom. Her ties to the college run deep: an uncle, Bob Kiekel, taught Spanish at Linfield in the 1960s. Her father, Jack Kiekel, was associate pastor at First Baptist Church from 1959 to 1968. He received a master's in education from Linfield and served on its Board of Trustees for five years in the 1970s.

The foundation, established in 2002, now has a budget of more than $600,000, Downs said. Because contaminated water is the culprit in spreading malaria, the foundation's first project was to buy a well-drilling rig and train local people to use it. Since then, a second drilling rig has been delivered and 38 wells have been drilled.

The foundation also has built seven schools and seven medical clinics. It airlifts annual donations of medicine from Direct Relief, a charity based in Santa Barbara, Calif.

"Our malaria program is blessed with one of the top malaria specialists in the world," Downs said. The foundation distributes netting and promotes the clean-up of standing water to prevent the disease, which is spread by mosquitoes.

As a result, Downs said, "We've found that the rate of malaria in the villages we've been covering is down about 75 percent in one year."

Downs divides her time between helping Sean, a software executive, run the foundation and teaching Bible study at her church. The family, including 16-year-old daughter Avery and 12-year-old son Brian, spends three weeks every summer in Sumba.

The foundation's long-term goal is to find a sustainable way for the Sumbanese to work their way out of poverty. A coffee crop has been grown, and a designer has been working on a line of jewelry for local women to make.

Alumni Awards Recipients

Walker Award: Dave Hansen

He's been a father figure to thousands of Linfield College students but Dave Hansen takes his parental role in stride. As dean of students and vice president for student services, Hansen oversees the student body while maintaining an active role in the administration and even teaching an occasional course. For his work on behalf of Linfield during the past 37 years, Hansen earned the Walker Award, given to a non-alumnus in recognition of service to the college.

Distinguished Alumnus Award: John Creasman '59

For John Paul Creasman '59, helping those less fortunate is a way of life. From the steamy jungles of South America to the head waters of the Amazon, Creasman, assistant professor in ophthalmology and department chair at the Mayo Clinic in Arizona, has spent more than three decades performing humanitarian work and teaching health education around the world. He earned the Linfield College Distinguished Alumnus Award, which honors graduates whose professional achievements mark them as leaders in their fields.

Alumni Service Award: Dick Hughes '75

Dick Hughes '75 gets paid for having an opinion. As editorial page editor of the Salem Statesman Journal, Hughes shares his thoughts with newspaper subscribers on a daily basis. For the past three years, he's also voluntarily shared his opinions and publishing expertise as a member of the Linfield Magazine Advisory Board. His efforts on behalf of the college have earned him the Alumni Service Award.

Outstanding Young Alumnus: Peter Fisher '96

Entrepreneurial spirit emerged early for Peter Fisher '96. At 7, he pulled his red wagon door-to-door selling holly. At 18, he started a painting company to subsidize his Linfield tuition. Now after rising through the ranks of a national finance company, Fisher has one again set out on his own in the business world, this time as co-founder of AndersonFisher LLC, a third party investment and 401(k) consulting firm. Fisher, this year's Outstanding Young Alumnus, is recognized for distinguishing himself in his field.
