Images of the Modern Immigrant: Persuasive Metaphors Presented in U.S. Newspapers

LIBBY WILCOX
INTERCULTURAL COMMUNICATION
37.9 million immigrants in the U.S. (2007)

Arizona Immigration Law SB 1070
- Passed April 23, 2010
  - Ultimate goal is to fight illegal immigration in the state, which has a large influx of illegal immigrants coming in from its border with Mexico
  - Allows police officers to question/check identification of anyone they believe to be an illegal
    - Forces all immigrants to carry paperwork in case they are stopped
Research Questions

1. What are the metaphors present in U.S. American Newspapers and how do they influence U.S. American perceptions of immigrants?

1. How have metaphors in current newspaper rhetoric, related to SB 1070, affected the perceptions of Latino immigrants?
Method

- Metaphoric Criticism
  - Looks for explicit and implicit metaphors to reveal rhetorical trends
  - Examines text for the tenor (the subject) and the vehicle (the means of portraying the subject)
  - Groups the metaphors according to common themes

Data Analysis

Negative Metaphors

- Immigrant as alien
  - Associated with racial profiling statements
  - Hints at the dehumanization of the immigrant
    - They are unlike the dominant culture and will never be able to assimilate

Previous communication scholars have also found this metaphor
Data Analysis

Negative Metaphors

- Immigrant as criminal
  - Used the words “crime” and “criminal” 13 times
  - Alluded to the idea that the criminals are primarily Latino
  - Labeled the immigrant as a primary cause of societal harm
Data Analysis

Positive Metaphors

- Immigrant as river
  - Shift towards a neutral metaphor
  - Repeatedly used statements like “flowed in”
    - Suggests that immigrants will constantly be flowing, or will continue coming into the United States
  - Implies the need to “dam” or control a river
    - Arizona SB 1070 is a document created to prevent the chaos that could ensue from an influx or constant flow of immigrants
Data Analysis

Positive Metaphors

- Immigrant as victim
  - Articles include personal interviews and stories of immigrants
    - Who have been raped, mistreated, and abused during their border crossings
  - Articles discuss racial profiling
    - Mention “race” and “racial” 21 times
    - Ignites the idea that the law will encourage racial profiling of Latinos
    - Suggests that a particular type of individual looks like an immigrant
Conclusions and Implications

- Newspapers overall
  - The New York Times and The Washington Post present the same 4 metaphors of the immigrant
    - Demonstrates their commitment to present both sides of a current issue as objectively as possible
Conclusions and Implications

- Overall shift in rhetoric
  - River metaphor is a more realistic depiction
    - Demonstrates there is no simple or correct solution to the issue of the immigrant
    - Forces audiences to realize that the immigrant is here to stay
    - Emphasizes the need to integrate the immigrant into our economy and culture
  - Victim metaphor creates the emotion of sympathy
    - Works towards humanizing the immigrant
    - Can also be a disempowering metaphor
      - It insinuates that the victim, or the immigrant, requires the help of others
Conclusions and Implications

- Cultural norms and worldview are changing
  - Emergence of the river and the victim metaphor allude that U.S. Americans are gradually becoming more accepting of immigrants

  - These changes reflect the inevitability of the immigrant and multiculturalism in the U.S.

  - Overall emergence of two new humanizing metaphors demonstrates a media’s attempt to shift society’s attitudes towards a more favorable perception of the immigrant
