Historical Note

Throughout the lifespan of the Linfield Chamber Orchestra (LCO), from its commencement in 1990 to the final concerts in 2012, the Department of Music at Linfield made an effort to collect and maintain examples of programming, music and the interior workings of the orchestra. The LCO historian, Marion van Dyk, who was also the chairman of the board of directors for more than a decade, became part of the project at the initial steering committee meeting in 1990.

Vocal music instruction and choral instruction date back to the inception of Linfield College, but a strong string program was felt to be lacking by the steering committee (including Gwen Leonard, Marion van Dyk, Jill Timmons, and others.) The music faculty felt that one director must be secured to devote themselves to the project. The initial director, Sylvain Frémaux, met with the subcommittee in the spring of 1990 and was selected for the task.

Over the 21-year life of the orchestra, several directors oversaw the artistic direction of the LCO. Sylvain Frémaux, previously assistant conductor to the Strasbourg Symphony Orchestra, relocated to the Portland-Metro area in September 1990 and was the original candidate and director of the orchestra. He was succeeded by Huw Edwards in 2002 and Michael Gesme in 2003.

The orchestra was not only organized in the effort to provide a musical service to the Yamhill County area, but to be a teaching orchestra to the students of Linfield College, with the goal implementing a string music tradition. The aim of one student paired at every stand would not only increase the appeal of the department to students, it would improve the quality of instruction that Linfield could provide. About 30 strong, musicians from McMinnville and the Portland-Metro area played an average of four concerts per year, formally structured as one choral, one chamber, a string program, and one full orchestra program.
