Historical Note

As a visually comprehensive glimpse into the history of Linfield College, this collection of negatives and photographs serves as creative graphic documentation and memorabilia, beginning at the early days of the Baptist College through to the school's presently well-endowed and scenic campuses in McMinnville and Portland, Oregon. In its ongoing legacy, initially fostered by American Baptists believing education and Christian faith to be intertwined, the college remains a testament to the persevering innovation that kept it afloat when, by 1908, it was the only surviving Baptist-founded college in the Northwest.

In 1844, William T. Newby of McMinnville, Tennessee and Sebastian C. Adams of Ohio, ventured to establish a space in now-Yamhill County, Oregon, that could fulfill the overlapping needs of education and Baptist ministerial goals. The result was McMinnville College, incorporated in 1858 with more than forty approving signatures and eight trustees. For nearly a quarter of a century afterward, classes were held in a quadrangular two-story building which sat on the present site of McMinnville's First Baptist Church. The first series of photographs in the collection provides some historical insight into that and the similarly humble circumstance of later having only one permanent building. Most obvious in photos is the steady growth of the student and faculty bodies and the improvement and expansion of campus grounds. Little of the structural dilapidation and economic setback is as obvious through photos as it is explained in Professor Stein Jonasson's history of Linfield's first century, Bricks Without Straw. However, the diligence highlighted by Jonasson may be inferred from the continuation of photographs and their recording of the social and academic progression at Linfield.

Pre-20th century images mainly depict students and townsfolk through formal portraiture, strolls through town and lawn, on horse and buggy, or posed in groups. As the relationship between college and city has long been one of mutual concern for each other's ability to grow, there are also images of some of McMinnville's earliest and most ardent sponsors, like the Brumback family.

Under college President Burchett's administration (1878-1881), and with great help from professor of mathematics D.C. Latourette, course grades and flexible teaching assistantship were implemented for the first time. One of the greatest manifestations of progress occurred in 1882. Thanks to generous land donations by Samuel and Mahala Cozine and Mrs. P.W. Chandler (widow of McMinnville College's first president); monetary donations from residents near the Cozine property; and a brick-burning contract won by W. T. Newby (founder of McMinnville), Pioneer Hall was constructed and the college moved to its present location. As the college's oldest building, its image is spread throughout all collection series, and is particularly abundant within Series 6, alongside stills of the entire campus as it has grown.

Rev. Dr. Leonard Riley's administration between 1906 and 1931, credited by Dr. Kenneth Scott Latourette as having "rescued the college from near death," enacted many changes that, to date, contribute to the college's lasting foundation. Mrs. Frances E. Ross Linfield (McMinnville College was renamed after her late husband, Reverend George Fisher Linfield) is the foremost example of Linfield's ability to survive and flourish in the first quarter of the 20th century. Businesswoman, trustee, dean and longtime friend of the college, Mrs. Linfield was greatly moved by the financial and structural needs of the school. In fulfillment of her mission to endow Christian education and memorialize her husband's ministerial livelihood, she bequeathed her properties in Spokane, Washington (valued at a quarter of a million dollars), helping to make possible Melrose Hall and increased annual and material assets, all of which slowly led to campus-wide renovations. By 1928, and through conscientious fundraising, outreach and college standards reform, Linfield earned accreditation; the campus was voted into the city of McMinnville, the number of graduates increased by nearly 600 and the school's financial footing was more secure than it had ever been.

Series 2 in the collection illustrates a significant leap in the transitioning landscape of campus and community. In this timespan between 1940 and 1969, the number of groups and activities increased to include a particularly strong following of the football team and May Day events. Class scenes were more often photographed, highlighted by students, faculty and staff in candid and instructive documentation. For the first time, a Linfield president's administration (Dillin) is more closely catalogued through film and newspaper.

Steadily, students, professors and staff were caught on camera everywhere on campus, and sometimes off. From the class and activity scenes there are enlightening views of laboratory work, thriving theatre and musical arts, commencements, lectures and professional performers. With the rise of the personal camera, photographers like Reid Blackburn '74, Tom Ballard, Rick Rappaport, and professor David Horton greatly contributed creative viewpoints of Linfield's expanding grounds, buildings and academic life.

The Walker and Bull Administrations offer another sharp leap in photographs. Linfield's international presence became such that pictures of those journeys significantly account for the sizes of Series 4 and Series 5 in the collection. Linfield's acquisition of the Good Samaritan nursing school in Portland, Oregon, displays a blossoming of academic options. The diversity of lecturers and performers magnifies to include visits by international ambassadors, former U.S. presidents, world-renowned musicians and interdisciplinary philosophers.

While a quick study of this finding aid might suggest that the history of Linfield College is linear only in its fortitude, the photographs reveal a close observation—and celebration—of what becomes and remains possible when pioneers achieve precisely the outcome they aim for.

Content Description

This collection is made up of various genres and recorded mediums capturing academic life in and involving Linfield College in Oregon and abroad. The total series count is seven: 1885-1939, 1940-1969, 1970-1979, 1980-1989, 1990-2012; Portraits, Trustees, and Campus Buildings; and Professional Photographers. Series 1 through 5, arranged by decade, narrates student life through photographs, glass lantern slides, and negatives. Series 6 is organized to complement the very broad span of years its portrait, landscape and architectural photographs represent. Series 7 is dedicated to several dozen boxes of photographs, clip art, slides and negatives, as produced by professional Oregon photographers and the Office of Institutional Advancement.

Box 47

This box houses the bulk of Linfield-related photography by photojournalism student, Reid Blackburn '74. After Linfield, Blackburn worked five years at the Vancouver Columbian newspaper. He was donating time to National Geographic magazine and the U.S. Geological Survey at Mount St. Helens, in 1980, when he perished in its eruption.
