Fulbright fuels math research

Kamila Larripa '01

Growing up as the daughter of two scientists, Kamila Larripa '01 saw the world through curious eyes.

It's little wonder then that Larripa has pursued a life of science herself, centered on research and her passion for math and biology. Larripa is currently a Ph.D. candidate at the University of California, Davis, in applied mathematics. She has been awarded a Fulbright grant to study in Switzerland, where she is creating a mathematical model to describe the distribution of actin, a cellular protein.

Larripa arrived in Switzerland in July, and took French classes at the University of Fribourg before beginning research in October at the École Polytechnique Fédérale de Lausanne.

"Math is beautiful and austere, but when applied to real world problems, it comes alive for me," said Larripa, whose work combines biology and mathematics. "This Fulbright project is the culmination of so much that I learned at Linfield. I'm using language, math and biology."

At Linfield, Larripa immersed herself in math and science classes, while minoring in French. She studied linguistics with Peter Richardson, professor of German, who remembers Larripa as someone who always sat in the front row and was "bright, cheery, thoughtful and articulate."

"I was impressed with her as a human being and as a student," he said. "She was clearly going places, and I'm glad she went to a place I love very much."

Larripa developed a love of travel and international living during a semester-abroad trip to Paris during her junior year. She also took part in two summer research programs, which propelled her to graduate school — George Washington University's Summer Program for Women in Math and the Enhancing Diversity in Graduate Education Program at Bryn Mawr College.

Larripa expects to receive a Ph.D. in mathematics in 2006. She hopes to continue her research and teach at a small liberal arts college.

"Maybe even Linfield," she said.

Closing in on 50,000 miles

Gordon Gillmouth '63 of Fremont, Calif., is closing in on a lifelong goal.

Gillmouth, an avid runner who logs more than 1,500 miles each year, wants to run 50,000 miles before hanging up his running shoes. So far he's completed nearly 40,000 miles.

"I particularly enjoy long distance relays for the athletic challenge and the team camaraderie," said Gillmouth, a finance manager with Roche Palo Alto LLC, in Palo Alto, Calif.

Gillmouth has focused on three relay events since taking up running for exercise 28 years ago. He's participated in the Oregon Hood to Coast Relay for 15 consecutive years and the Saturn Relay in California for 10 years. Most recently, he has run the Ameri-Cana International Relay, from Nelson, British Columbia, to Sandpoint, Idaho, 223.7 miles.

Gillmouth, who grew up in McMinnville and earned a business degree at Linfield, was a sports writer for the News-Register for seven years during high school and college. He worked under Paul Durham, long-time Linfield athletic director and head football coach, who moonlighted as the News-Register sports editor.

"His sports column was called 'Dodging with Durham,'" Gillmouth remembered. "I learned a lot about life from Paul and admire how he was able to handle all those duties."

Gillmouth said he enjoys running for many reasons — the beauty of the outdoors, the freedom to run just about anywhere and the fact that it's a relatively inexpensive sport.

"It's a great stress reliever, and I've met many great people through running," he added. "Some people look for excuses not to run or participate in physical activity; my theory is to find excuses to run!"

A taste of Linfield

Linfield College trustees literally got a taste of Linfield during the Board of Trustees luncheon in November.

“Linfield Cheesecake,” a recipe devised by Bette Hagman ‘43, who is also known as the “Gluten-Free Gourmet,” was served for dessert. The recipe is included in Hagman’s newest book, The Gluten-Free Gourmet Cooks Comfort Foods. She is the author of five other medical diet cookbooks as well.

Over the past 27 years, Hagman has created more than 1,700 recipes in her Seattle kitchen, all tailored to the diets of those who cannot eat gluten, a protein found in wheat, rye, barley and possibly oats. Her recipes fill the tables of a growing segment of the population which suffers from celiac disease, a digestive illness that causes malnutrition due to gluten intolerance.

In addition to penning her cookbook series, Hagman has filmed nine PBS cooking shows and frequently lectures around the country. She is also involved with four national celiac organizations.

Hagman dubbed the dessert “Linfield Cheesecake” after a group visiting from the college sampled the tropical-flavored dessert while sitting around her kitchen table.

Crust:

- 1 cup flaked coconut
- 1/4 cup chopped macadamia nuts
- 2 tablespoons butter or margarine, melted

Filling:

- Two 8-ounce packages cream cheese (light okay)
- 1 cup sugar
- 3 tablespoons gluten-free mix
- 3 eggs
- 1 cup sour cream (light okay)
- 3 tablespoons lemon juice
- 1 teaspoon vanilla
- 1/4 teaspoon pineapple or almond extract
- One 8-ounce can crushed pineapple, drained well

Gluten-free mix:

- 2 parts rice flour
- 2/3 part potato starch
- 1/3 part tapioca flour

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Grease a 9” springform pan.

Crust: In a small bowl, combine the coconut and macadamia nuts. Stir in the butter and press onto the bottom of the prepared pan. Bake for 10 minutes. Cool.

Filling: In the bowl of your mixer, beat the cream cheese and sugar until smooth. Add the flour mix and beat well. Add the eggs, beating on low until just combined. Add the sour cream, lemon juice and flavorings; beat until just blended. Remove the bowl from the mixer and stir in the drained pineapple with a mixing spoon.

Pour the filling over the crust. Bake 50 minutes or until the center is almost set. Cool and refrigerate for four hours or overnight. To serve, top each piece with a dab of whipped cream or nondairy substitute and decorate with a slice of peeled kiwi fruit (or your choice of other tropical fruit). Makes 12 servings.

Directing homeland security

In 1992, Beverlee (Venell) Stilwell '95 knew she needed a bachelor's degree to advance beyond her state government job.

So the 30-year-old divorced mother of two enrolled in Linfield's Adult Degree Program. Twelve years later, in May 2004, she became one of Gov. Ted Kulongoski's highest-ranking advisers when he created the Oregon Office of Homeland Security and appointed her its director.

Stilwell, who received her B.S. in management with honors, said she was drawn to the Linfield program because of its flexibility and high-caliber instructors. She was able to take a variety of electives. "I was able to pursue a lot of things I'd never been able to pursue before," she said.

Overall, she said, "It's helped me be a better leader and a better manager."

Kate Bemis, director of the Adult Degree Program, said students such as Stilwell "have demonstrated competence and intellect, but lack the academic background to take the next step. Linfield offers them the theoretical context to understand their workplace experiences in a new way. These students are a delight to work with because they're very focused on what they know they're capable of doing, and they bring life experience to the classroom."

Stilwell's life as a student was hectic. She worked 60 to 80 hours a week while taking a full load of courses and caring for her daughters, now 18 and 21.

Her career in criminal justice began in 1993 as a federal grant coordinator for the Criminal Justice Services Division of the Oregon State Police. In 1999 she was promoted to commander of the State Police Intergovernmental Services Bureau, overseeing Emergency Management, the state fire marshal, the Forensic Services Division, the state medical examiner and Criminal Justice Services Division.

The new agency consolidates Oregon's anti-terrorism efforts and preparation for natural disasters. Stilwell's duties include coordination with federal authorities and state legislators. She describes herself as a dedicated problem-solver, multi-tasker and strategic thinker. "Being a mom, you immediately learn how to do about five things at once," she said.

As for her future, Stilwell said, "I never rule out anything. I do the absolute best I can every day and see what opportunities present themselves."
