Linfield connects

Linfield alumni understand the value of the Wildcat network. Now, a new tool provided by the Office of Alumni and Parent Relations makes utilizing the Linfield community even easier.

We recently launched Linfield Connect, an easy-to-use online resource that serves a variety of purposes. Have a job opening to advertise? Hoping to get in touch with a college roommate? Interested in hiring a realtor/dentist/interior designer, and want to give business to a fellow alumnus?

Linfield Connect makes all of these things possible – and easy. It contains a job board for those wishing to post or apply for an open position. There is also a directory to search for alumni by name, city and state, industry and more. Read about upcoming events, learn the latest Linfield news, become a resource for current students, peruse recently added photos or add your own, and much more. Logging in is easy – create an account or log in with an existing Facebook or LinkedIn account. A mobile app is also available.

Visit the site often to see updates and changes. And if you've reunited with an old friend or made another connection, let us know. We'd like to share your story. Learn more at LinfieldConnect.com.

Brister on the big screen

Courtesy of Coletta Burson

Jenna Brister's movie debut features big hair and bigger laughs.

Brister '06 appears in Permanent, a comedy about bad hair, awkward family members, teenagehood and the 1980s. The PG-13 film stars Rainn Wilson and Patricia Arquette and will be released in theaters and on iTunes Dec. 15.

Brister, a comedienne, actress and screenwriter, plays a hairdresser named Sally. "Sally's an over-confident rascal who has never given a perm, but she gives one and ruins this poor girl's life for the rest of the movie," says Brister.

She credits a January Term screenwriting class at Linfield for lighting her storytelling fire.

"I tell so many stories about my time at Linfield," she says. "It's such a close-knit community and everyone is so supportive. I was able to be creatively free."

Brister has appeared on multiple stages across the country, including Comedy Sportz in Portland, the Upright Citizens Brigade Theater in New York, and The Moth and The Hollywood Improv in Los Angeles. She created a character named Maven while at The Groundlings, comedy theatre in Los Angeles, and has developed a screenplay set in small-town Oregon based on that character.

Brister is focusing on screenwriting going forward. She has a movie, The Deadly Double, in production at Lifetime. There's no word, however, on how big the actors' hair will be in this movie.

Looking back Eight guys in a station wagon — An unlikely group of cheerleaders traveled 950 miles to surprise the Linfield College volleyball team and help propel them to a second-place finish at the Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women (AIAW) national tournament at La Verne College (now University), Calif., in 1981. "We arrived just in time for the match, and when the team came out of the locker room we were yelling and cheering," said Dan Preston '83, now vice president for enrollment management at Linfield. Preston was joined by John Meyer '83, Joe Miglioretto '84 and '92, Curt Goetsch '82, Steve Patt '84, Douglas Brininstool '84, Tim Shannon '82 and an eighth classmate, who has not been identified. (Contact us if you know the identity.) Players like Jan (Wise) Barker '82 say the support is something they will never forget. "That surprise was a huge tension breaker for us. It was awesome," she said. Carolyn (Pearce) Kraus '82 and Susan (Holm) Allsop '84 earned All-American honors at the tournament. "Having that support was pretty memorable," said Shane Kimura '78, who retires this year after 40 seasons as head coach. (See Kimura's story, page 38.)

Building peace

In these turbulent times, many people want to help make the world a more peaceful place. For Nicholas Weiland '09, it's all in a day's work.

Weiland is a program specialist at the U.S. Institute of Peace (USIP) in Washington, D.C. USIP works to prevent and resolve armed conflict around the world by engaging directly in conflict zones and providing analysis, education and resources to those working for peace. Weiland, at USIP since 2014, is in the Advising Support Program, which "trains U.S. advisors in skills like negotiation, conflict analysis and communication before they deploy abroad," he says.

"I'm the program coordinator of sorts," says Weiland. "I've done a little bit of everything, which makes this job interesting."

A self-described lifelong learner, Weiland earned a major in philosophy with a minor in political science at Linfield, then explored his interest in international relations by teaching English in China for a year. In 2012, he moved to Washington, D.C., with his wife, Meagan, to attend the School of International Service at American University. He earned a master's in U.S. foreign policy.

"Linfield prepared me in a number of ways," he recalls. "The community that I found there and the mentorship of my professors allowed me to gain confidence in myself and foster my own intellectual curiosity. I look back and think of it as a very formative experience."

On the offense

Ernie Rose '86 didn't end up managing a $10 billion division and 14 international offices for Nike without knowing a thing or two about operating in a complex corporate environment.

But it wasn't always clear – at least to Rose, vice president of global apparel operations at Nike – that he would have that kind of a career. Looking back now, Rose credits the personal attention and mentoring he received as a college student with giving him the foundation he needed.

Rose credits the "small community feel" and "easy access to professors" at Linfield with helping him become a serious student. Meanwhile, he was putting in countless hours on the practice field and in the classroom with the football team under Hall of Fame Coach Ad Rutschman '54. Rose was part of a three-quarterback starting rotation for much of the 1984 season that ended with a small-college national championship, but it was watching Rutschman analyze opponents and craft game plans off the field that left the biggest impression.

"That really taught me a lot about how I operate today," Rose says. "There's a term we use at Nike: Be on the offense always. For me, a lot of what that means, of how I interpret it, of how I prepare and do my job, comes from Ad's chalk talks at Linfield."
