Is it a coincidence that Linfield unveiled a beefier mascot at the same time as it opened a renovated weight room? Mack looks stronger after hitting the gym.

Donald Duck, Porky Pig, Winnie the Pooh and the previous Mack had something in common: a lack of lower-body attire. The new Mack is bucking the pants-less trend and opted for a pair of shorts.

This mascot comes with a fuzzy tail that will surely be tugged by little mischievous Wildcat fans.

Linfield's mascot has donned a sailor cap for decades. Like the previous mascot, this version of Mack has a cap, and the "L" resembles the block version found on the football field.

This kitten needs no mittens. The new Mack has four claws on each paw, which is better for taking selfies with Linfield fans.

Mack sometimes wears the jersey number that correlates with the number of consecutive winning football seasons.

Is Foster the People Mack's favorite band? Perhaps! Mack has "Pumped Up Kicks" instead of floppy feet.
