2008

Table of Contents

Linfield Magazine Staff

Follow this and additional works at: http://digitalcommons.linfield.edu/linfield_magazine

Recommended Citation
Available at: http://digitalcommons.linfield.edu/linfield_magazine/vol5/iss2/3

This article is brought to you for free via open access, courtesy of DigitalCommons@Linfield. For more information, please contact digitalcommons@linfield.edu.
Linfield stable in challenging times

I am writing in the aftermath of our 2008 Homecoming celebration. It was a spectacular weekend, with perfect weather, an exciting football victory and a record alumni turnout.

We saw people everywhere – at Alumni Council events, fraternity reunions, football tailgating parties, lectures and panels, athletic competitions, music concerts, and local restaurants and wine bars. The Class of 1958 celebrated its initiation into the “50-Year Club,” and parents of new freshmen pulled me aside to say that their children absolutely love Linfield College. In a panel discussion tided “It’s Our Linfield,” one college senior asserted that she associates the college with the words “family” and “love.” Certainly it felt like a family reunion, filled with smiles and hugs and stories of growing up, falling in love and entering the world.

But every so often, a loyal alumnus would nervously whisper a private question to me: “How are we doing? Will the economic turmoil undermine the college?” Usually the tone reminded me of an alarmed uncle or parent, wanting to do everything possible to keep his child strong. At the reunion of the class of 1978, however, the tone was livelier – and funnier – as our 30-year alumnus reminisced about a much shakier time in Linfield’s history.

I am pleased to report that today our college is in very good shape. We have had balanced budgets for many years, and 2007-08 was no exception. Now on campus are the three largest classes in Linfield’s history (the classes of 2009, 2011 and 2012). Because we do not have a large endowment, we do not rely on investment income for most of our operating expenses. Thus our budget is largely unaffected by the declines in the stock market. Of course we would prefer to have a larger endowment – nothing is more important for the long-term future of the college – but Linfield can deal with the current turmoil in the stock market.

We have also managed our financial affairs carefully. Like other colleges, we have issued bonds in order to build residence halls. But unlike many colleges, our bonds are fixed at pre-arranged rates. Variable rate bonds have risen as much as 600 percent in the last month, Linfield’s interest rates are fixed at levels similar to (or lower than) fixed rate home mortgages. Linfield’s interest rates are fixed at levels similar to (or lower than) fixed rate home mortgages.

Thus I now ask for your help. If you know young people who are planning to go to college, encourage them to consider Linfield. Everyone who was here for Homecoming weekend can attest that Linfield is thriving, that we have a wonderful faculty and campus, and that our sense of community is deep and profound. More than ever this is a great place to learn and to grow. And thanks to you – our loyal friends and alumni – Linfield will be even better in the future.

-- Thomas L. Hellie
President

Features

6 Evolution of an idea
An in-depth look at how students learn, including what sparks their interest in a research project and how professors assist them on the path of discovery.

12 Digging up history
Students hone archaeological skills as they search for remnants of a camp used by Chinese immigrants in the late 19th and early 20th centuries.

18 A powered-up teacher
Brian Winkenweder’s love of learning and teaching brings exuberance to the classroom.

20 Rebel with a cause
T.J. Day ’71 may have followed an unorthodox path to Linfield, but the lessons he learned have paid huge dividends.

26 Camp spurs young authors
Mindy Legard Larson ’95 taps the creativity of elementary students during an Author Camp for young writers.

Linfield Magazine

Editor
Mardi Mileham
mardi.mileham@linfield.edu
503-883-2498
Assistant Editor
Laura Davis
Graphic Design
Candelisa Salinas III
Photography
Toni Ballard
Kelly Bird

Contributors
Kelly Bird
Debbie (Hansen) Harmon ’90
Thomas L. Hellie
Beth Rogers Thompson
Megan Wills ’09

Advisory Board
Dick Hughes ’75
Sherri (Ponney) Partridge ’86

Linfield Magazine is published three times annually by Linfield College, McMinnville, Oregon.

Send address changes to: College Relations
Linfield College, 900 SE Baker St.
McMinnville, OR 97128-6984
linfieldmagazine@linfield.edu

Linfield stable in challenging times

I am writing in the afterglow of our 2008 Homecoming celebration. It was a spectacular weekend, with perfect weather, an exciting football victory and a record alumni turnout.

We saw people everywhere – at Alumni Council events, fraternity reunions, football tailgating parties, lectures and panels, athletic competitions, music concerts, and local restaurants and wine bars. The Class of 1958 celebrated its initiation into the “50-Year Club,” and parents of new freshmen pulled me aside to say that their children absolutely love Linfield College. In a panel discussion titled “It’s Our Linfield,” one college senior asserted that she associates the college with the words “family” and “love.” Certainly it felt like a family reunion, filled with smiles and hugs and stories of growing up, falling in love and entering the world.

But every so often, a loyal alumnus would nervously whisper a private question to me: “How are we doing? Will the economic turmoil undermine the college?” Usually the tone reminded me of an alarmed uncle or parent, wanting to do everything possible to keep his child strong. At the reunion of the class of 1978, however, the tone was livelier – and funnier – as our 30-year alumnus reminisced about a much shakier time in Linfield’s history.

I am pleased to report that today our college is in very good shape. We have had balanced budgets for many years, and 2007-08 was no exception. Now on campus are the three largest classes in Linfield’s history (the classes of 2009, 2011 and 2012). Because we do not have a large endowment, we do not rely on investment income for most of our operating expenses. Thus our budget is largely unaffected by the declines in the stock market. Of course we would prefer to have a larger endowment – nothing is more important for the long-term future of the college – but Linfield can deal with the current turmoil in the stock market.

We have also managed our financial affairs carefully. Like other colleges, we have issued bonds in order to build residence halls. But unlike many colleges, our bonds are fixed at pre-arranged rates. Variable rate bonds have risen as much as 600 percent in the last month, Linfield’s interest rates are fixed at levels similar to (or lower than) fixed rate home mortgages.

Thus I now ask for your help. If you know young people who are planning to go to college, encourage them to consider Linfield. Everyone who was here for Homecoming weekend can attest that Linfield is thriving, that we have a wonderful faculty and campus, and that our sense of community is deep and profound. More than ever this is a great place to learn and to grow. And thanks to you – our loyal friends and alumni – Linfield will be even better in the future.

-- Thomas L. Hellie
President

Features

6 Evolution of an idea
An in-depth look at how students learn, including what sparks their interest in a research project and how professors assist them on the path of discovery.

12 Digging up history
Students hone archaeological skills as they search for remnants of a camp used by Chinese immigrants in the late 19th and early 20th centuries.

18 A powered-up teacher
Brian Winkenweder’s love of learning and teaching brings exuberance to the classroom.

20 Rebel with a cause
T.J. Day ’71 may have followed an unorthodox path to Linfield, but the lessons he learned have paid huge dividends.

26 Camp spurs young authors
Mindy Legard Larson ’95 taps the creativity of elementary students during an Author Camp for young writers.