2007

A View from Melrose

Thomas L. Hellie
Linfield College

Follow this and additional works at: http://digitalcommons.linfield.edu/linfield_magazine

Recommended Citation
Available at: http://digitalcommons.linfield.edu/linfield_magazine/vol4/iss2/2

This article is brought to you for free via open access, courtesy of DigitalCommons@Linfield. For more information, please contact digitalcommons@linfield.edu.
Our greatest strength is our community

Shouts and laughter filtered into the President’s House one evening during new student orientation. I looked out to see hundreds of first-year students racing back and forth, throwing frisbees and chasing each other through the Oak Grove. They were claiming Linfield’s sacred space as their own, joining generations of students who have run and played, dreamed and studied, worked and rested under the oaks.

As I watched, I realized that I couldn’t help but think about what they might learn and experience during the next four years. I thought about the professors and staff who will influence them and provide direction and mentoring. I wondered where their passion for learning and service will lead them.

I thought too about the Linfield alumni I have met since becoming president 17 months ago. Individuals whose passion led them to become physicians, teachers and entrepreneurs. Those are the people whose influence and impact continue to this day. Throughout our history, our greatest resource has been our people – they are our foundation.

As we celebrate Linfield’s first 150 years, we must build on that foundation. How will we identify students who will benefit most from a Linfield education? How will we find students who will add to the richness of the Linfield Experience by participating in the classroom, lab and studio, on the playing field and in the performance hall? How will we assure these students access to a Linfield education? We have always been an egalitarian community, a place where family wealth or social class does not determine your place or status. We are a college where you are judged by your character, not your wallet. We owe it to our founders and owe it to our students to acquire the gifts and endowments that will allow us to achieve this vision.

Similarly, who are the faculty who will teach students today and tomorrow? How can we ensure that current and future teacher-scholars will advise and mentor and guide students the way generations of Linfield faculty have done? Endowments to support new and continuing faculty will guarantee that the quality of a Linfield education remains available to students who will grow and thrive.

Every fall we experience a kind of rebirth at Linfield with the arrival of new students, faculty and staff, joining those of us who already love this place and care about its future. Our founders gave us the principles upon which to build. For a century and a half, those values have shaped and guided thousands of students.

“Our founders gave us the principles upon which to build. For a century and a half, those values have shaped and guided thousands of students.”

— Thomas L. Hellie